All dogs bark from time to time, but some like barking so much that becomes a problem. noisy dogs can annoy neighbors, drive their owners to distraction, and also get fines and other legal penalties. Fortunately, in most cases, it is quite easy to form a dog to stop barking. You just need some patience and consistency to get the job done, along with lots of time to leave your dog calm down and learn the new routine. Before you start training your dog not barking, it is a good idea to understand why your dog is doing it. Bark dogs for many reasons, including boredom, anxiety, fear and stress. One of the most common causes of barking is territorial behavior. The dog sees someone or something that approaches their property, so feel the need to alert everyone to the situation. Some dogs also bark because of excitement and happiness. Spend some time thinking about situations that usually causes your dog barking to identify the root causes of behavior. cunfek / Getty Images excited, hyper dogs tend to bark more than tired ones, so start training making sure your dog is getting a lot of exercise. This includes both physical exercise, such as walking and racing, and mental exercises, such as training and games. The commands and tricks of training obedience can be a great way to do it while you bind with your dog. High energy breeds can do well with dog sports, such as agility, nose and herding. gradyrees / Getty Images Barking is a very exciting behavior for dogs, so if there are more dogs together, they will feed on each one's energy levels. Even quiet dogs will often begin to court as mad if they are around noisy ones. Human beings can also contribute to this problem. If you yell at your dog to bark, your dog will usually think you're just joining the fun. Instead, stay calm and calm. Focus on your dog's reward for calm rather than punish your dog to bark. goresr / Getty Images One of the easiest ways to avoid barking is simply avoiding anything makes your dog bark. This is not always possible, but it can be an easy solution if your dog barks for territorial reasons. Try to block your dog's view on the way out of the house using curtains or translucent movie window if your dog barks at people passing, or use a white noise machine to drown noises if your dog turns on for sounds. Iverdohlib / Getty Images Getting your dog used for things that make them bark can also stop behavior. If there is something in particular that puts your dog out, like the sight of another dog, in an area where you are likely to see it. At first, stay far enough away from it that your dog is naturally quiet. For some dogs, this might mean that you will have to be so far away that they can barely see it. Use the sweets and praise to reward the dog to watch the exciting thing without barking. As your dog begins to relax, you can gradually begin to move closer to it until your dog is able to be from without barking. Spooth / Getty Images Even dogs often bark to try to attract attention or other rewards from people. The classic example of this is a puppy that weeps at night when its new owners will not leave it in bed with them. For this type of barking, the best thing to do is just wait for it. Do not recognize your dog, even by looking at it or reproaching it. Even punishments are a kind of attention, so your dog will learn that barking makes you pay attention to them. This strategy could take a lot of patience at first, but most dogs learn the lesson quite quickly. Onetouchspark / Getty Images sometimes teaching your dog to the bark on Cue can make it easier to teach them not to bark even the bark. For dogs that bark a lot, this can be quite easy. Just wait for your dog to bark, so say "talk!" When your dog barks, reward them with praise and treats. Repeat frequently until your dog barks on Cue. For some dogs, it could be enough to stop most others barking. However, most dogs also need to learn a "silent" command. That's why you're almost the opposite. Go somewhere quiet and peaceful, where your dog is unlikely to see something that will make them bark. Say, "Speak!" And let him down a few times, then they say, "Tranquillo" and offer a treatment - the reward for not barking anymore. Salima Senyavskaya / Getty Images If your dog barks in particular moments, as when someone rings the bell, sometimes the best thing to do is teach them to do something else when they hear that sound. Teaching your dog to sit or lie quietly on a carpet is a good choice. Recovery of a favorite toy or possessing an object in the mouth will also prevent your dog from barking. Customize your approach to your dog's personality for faster results. Cunfek / Getty Images Many bark dogs due to fear or separation anxiety. For them, simply having a safe space to hide can give them the confidence they need to be quiet. Try putting your dog in a comfortable and quiet room to see if it helps. Even the formation of the case can be useful in these circumstances as most dogs learn to feel safe and safe in their cases. Make sure you keep things positive, however, how to create a negative association with the case can make the problem worse. Les / Getty Images If your dog is still barking, no matter what you feel, you may need to bring out help. A qualified professional trainer can help you develop strategies and training techniques that address the root of the problem and create a solutionFor dogs barking due to anxiety, you may also want to talk to your veterinarian. Sometimes drugs can help them feel less anxious, so you can make more exercise progress. FatCamera / Getty Images Your garden lack pizzazz during the leaves season? Pettilo with some well-placed trees and shrubs chosen for their colorful bark, evergreen foliage and an attractive habit. Why not create a serene seating area at the end of the garden, perhaps with a view on a lawn or even eventin or other feature? The bench shown is 5 feet long. The planting beds are backed by a fence of 7-foot thallus, fence or wall, which provides protection from the wind. We chose plants easy to grow and hardy in zones 5 to 9. They were selected to give an interest in four seasons; for the addition of color sottopianto with spring bulbs and interpianto with annual summer blowing. Select an open site that gets full sun for at least part of the day, ideally with well designed and fertile soil. Change the soil with lots of organic matter such as compost or rotting leaves, during preparation. The key to organize 1. Scarlet willow (Salix alba 'Britzensis') 1 plant trained as a standard and sealing invaded to 6 to 10 feet in height; bright red bark on upright stems; males "pussy willow" catkins followed by bright green foliage; prune off a third of the more older stems to the main branches each spring to maintain good shape and force the young growth with vibrant color cortex. 2. The walking stick by Harry Lauder (Corylus avellana 'Twisted') 1 plant slowly reaching 8 feet in height; curly branches; male "the lamb tail" pumpkins followed by twisted foliage; no pruning required. 3. gold willow (Salix alba 'Vitellina') 1 plant grown as a shrub; 6 feet tall; yellow stems of egg-yolk bright; prune a third of the old stems to the ground each spring to encourage new stems, as they have the brightest color of the bark. 4. Wood Siberian dog (Cornus alba 'Sibirica') 1 plant grown as a shrub; high from 6 to 7 feet; bright coral red bark, especially on the young growth; prune a third of the old stems to the ground each spring to encourage new shoots. 5. Wintercreeper (Euonymus fortunei 'Ivory Jade') 4 plants planted individually; 2 feet high with the widespread habit; evergreen; Rounded green foliage edged with ivory, tinged pink in cold weather; allow it to spread around other shrubs; Pruning only necessary to control the excessive growth. 6. Setterwort (Helleborus foetidus) 2 groups of 3 plants each, planted 18 inches apart; 1 1a 2 to 2 feet in height; leaves deeply fingers evergreen; bunches of green apples winter buds and flowers throughout the winter and spring; self sows freely; better in the shade. Poison. 7. White Disease (Lamium maculatum 'White Nancy') 5 plants planted 15 inches apart; 10 inches in height; evergreen leaves, silver edging, fresh green; small white flowers that bloom mostly in spring; It fills up quickly as a great ground cover. While it is often a friendly canine greeting, it is important to note when barking becomes inappropriate, aggressive or excessive. If you want to stop your dog, barking to other dogs, you must first first what is causing your dog to bark in the first place. Finding out how they feel will help you better understand the main cause of their loud noises. "Barking is the communication generally used by dogs to get something they associate as "positive" to happen, or to prevent something they feel is "negative" to happen", a spokesperson for the Dogs Trust says Country Living. "If barking succeeds in bringing the desired result, for example a bark brought to them receiving their favorite treatment, a dog will learn that barking was a good choice. " If you're not sure what to do, take a look at the Dogs Trust tips on how to stop a dog barking under...1. Take a Different Path If you want to reduce your dog's barking, it might be worth taking a less public path. Many dogs bark at other dogs and people when out and about, so avoid busy areas. "Turn your dog on quieter routes at less demanding times of the day, so you're less likely to meet other dogs", the Dogs Trust team told us. If you find yourself encountering other dogs, do not tell your dog to bark as this could make them worried or confused. "Be careful not to accidentally reinforce the bark." Images EyeWolfgetty 2. Learn to Recognize How Your Dog Feels While your dog may bark at people or other dogs for a variety of reasons, it is critical to address the motivation behind the bark. Some dogs may bark at others to greet them, while others may bark because they feel threatened by their presence. "It is very important to pay attention to your dog's behavior, if there is something you are worried about á for example if your dog barks repeatedly or for extended periods of time á you should always ask your veterinarian, so that any possible medical reason for the behavior, such as pain, can be treated", the team advises. "If the bark persists, your veterinarian will be able to refer you to an appropriately qualified and experienced behaviourist. They will create a tailor-made program to help change the way your dog feels and behaves around other dogs." 3. Keep walking A dog walk is the highlight of a day for many, but it can be hard to control constant barking. If you are experiencing this regularly, keep your dog on the head and keep walking. When dogs are worried or frightened, they may also bark at another dog to try to increase the distance between them and make the other dog go away. A worried dog who can't avoid the other dog, for example because they are in the lead, might also be frustrated by this", the team tells us. 4. Distract your dog through trainingLearn tips, tricks and tips to help your dog ignore On a walk. You may want a bit of training, but your dog will soon go ahead. Don't forget to bring the sweets. These will be useful when you want to praise them for good behavior. "There may be moments when you have to distract your dog," adds The Dogs Trust. "Practice spreading a handful of sweets at home, saying 'Find' Find as you do, so that your dog has to put his nose on the ground and sniff out to enjoy. The more you repeat this game, your dog will start to look down when you say 'find it', waiting for their treats. You can then use this to distract your dog when you notice other dogs around." Johner ImagesGetty Images 5. Teach your dog to pay attention to youThis may seem simple, but learn how to teach your dog to look at the signal, check-in with you, and pay attention to you on walks can help. Not only will it help them stay focused when distractions arise, but it will also strengthen your bond. Don't forget to reward them with hives when they pass in front of another dog calmly. 6. Bring your dog to a training courseif you still need additional help, consider taking your dog to a training course (some are running virtually due to blocking). «The Dogs Trust's Dog School offers high quality dog training and respectful of well-being during fun and educational courses», adds the team. «Our experienced instructors offer short courses for puppies, teenagers and adults, teaching valuable skills that allow dogs and masters to live happily».
